Excerpt: . . . 15 service areas, adopt adequate public facilities ordinances, levy im-pact taxes or fees, or use similar mechanisms to internalize the true economic costs of new development. In addition, an increasing number of States have recently enabled or required local jurisdic-tions to manage land more efficiently through the designation of growth areas or application of State criteria for funding infrastruc-ture. Usually costing of millions of dollars per mile, capital invest-ments in new water infrastructure are one of the most expensive forms of public infrastructure needed to support development. Sew-age treatment plants often cost millions of dollars each, and water lines cost several hundred thousand dollars per mile, costs that are not insignificant. Moreover the costs of operation and maintenance of infrastructure are substantial and continuing. Infrastructure construction is not only capital intensive; it has a significant effect on the environment. In a report from the Open Lands Project, a Chicago-based urban conservation group, the group found that water infrastructure plans which are not coordi-nated with development plans such as land...
