Not illustrated. 1917 Excerpt: .Here ignorantly happy dwell in joy Princes like Dardanus who founded Troy; With Teucer father of a royal race, Gallant as noble, and most fair of face; Ilus, Assaracus, of blood divine, Through whom iEneas proudly traced his line. Here stood showing glorious wounds a band Of heroes fall n to save its native land; Though other arts could equal entrance gain, --To give life charm, or steal a pang from pain. Priests too, who as they at the altar stood Offered pure lives as well as victims blood: And seers, who ne'er falsified Heav'n's truth, But spoke as they heard from Apollo's mouth: --A various tribe, yet all alike in this, That, having served, they have deserved their bliss. The Maid led where the white-filleted throng Was thickest; for Musaeus's the song, Responsive to the lyre's seven sweet chords, That vied with all the magic of the words. High he by head and shoulders o'er the ring Around. The Sibyl, when he ceased to sing, Besought him of his courtesy to tell Where might Anchises in that blest land dwell; Their search for him had many labours cost; Dread sights been seen, perilous rivers crossed; Their grace was brief, they must not longer bide; How, clogged with flesh, find him without a guide? Quick answer made the sage: We count no home As you on earth; wheresoever we roam At home are we; for our repose at noon,...
