Excerpt: . . . action, and herein there is an essential difference between this case and that of Johnson v. Thorndike. The district had no legal right, un-der the circumstances then existing, to raise money by taxation to build a school-house on the lot where they did build it. It is not a question of expediency merely, as to the raising of money for that purpose, but one of legal right purely. Has any majority, less than two-thirds of a school district, the power under our statutes to locate a school-house, and raise money to build it, on a lot to which more than one-third of the voters present and voting object, and against which the appellate tribunal, created by the statute, have filed their decision The answer must be in the negative. -3. But it is suggested, that until after the reception of parol evi dence of the...
