Not illustrated. 1885 Excerpt: .early dawn, A tiny cherub, of beauteous form, fLightly tapped at the window, and entering, Scattered bright sunshine on all within. Flitting around in the roseate light, In his soft, fleecy robe of pearly white, Shook dew-drops of love from his silken wings, And the sweet perfume that a cherub brings; And he touched each heart, and moisten d each eye With incense of love, as he flitted by; Then, with a smile on his wee sweet face, Flew to love s bosom for a fond embrace, And nestled close to that heart of love, Ere he plumed his wings for his flight above. Another cherub was there, though unseen, And witnessed the joy of that tender scene; Well he remembered each dear, loving face, And the thrill of love in that fond embrace; Twas the angel guide of that tiny guest, Nestling so closely on that mother s breast: It was Angel Georgie, with folded wings, Awaiting his message of love to bring. With a loving smile he shook from his wings The fragrant incense a cherub brings; And he touched each heart, and each eye and lip With a soothing balm, and sealed with a kiss; Then tenderly lifted the nestling dove From its resting-place, that bosom of love, And wrapped it gently in his robe of white, Then spread his wings for the upward flight. Straightway, in a halo of silvery sheen, An envoy of angels came softly in, And circling the twain...
